

CLARK SPRING, Washington co. Md.
August 29.—I am sorry—I have just learned that the English miners at the Tunnel of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, 20 miles from Hagerstown, have struck upon
a HIGH AND DRY LIEF. It yields water at the rate of 70 per cent.

On matters of this kind, a resolution was adopted by the Assembly of 1944, and it was decided that the Committee should be asked to report on the subject.

the opposition and not judge how dangerous it was of raising the expenditure when the revenue was the source of great reduction under the commission. But all was in vain. Nothing could arrest the headlong folly of the moment. What we were aware of? Then still we had to look forward to approaching danger, because we actually were threatened with disaster? The very fact that we were to wage the Spanish campaign, the business members, that on June 20 we

Mr. Clay's Speech. Mr. Clay delivered on the 25th ult. his sentiments in opposition to the Sub-Treasury scheme. The simple announcement, says the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot, that Mr. Clay had the day spread like wild fire through the city, and long before half past nine, the galleries were filled to overflowing. Mr. Clay considered the Sub-Treasury scheme as aiming at the destruction of the State Banks and the expropriation of Mr. Rives as presiding there, and if he had no vote between the two, although Mr. Rives' fall was not what he wished, he should prefer that scheme. The following is a short report of the speech furnished by the correspondent of the Patriot:

I can, of course, only touch upon a few—a very few of the topics which Mr. Clay brought under view and illustrated in the course of a speech of nearly four hours. He regarded all the measures that have been proposed, but especially those proposed by the Committee of Finance, as mere temporary expedients; or, if any of them are intended to be permanent, as aggravations of the mischievous policy which has brought embarrassment and ruin to our shores.

In spite of the internal distress and embarrassment as the distinguished characteristic of these times—but this very universality of trouble, he looks upon as a ground of hope; if we would only draw lessons of experience from the past. He reminded his auditors that five years ago we had the soundest currency in the world—and how all of its advantages had been suddenly snatched from us by that despotic act—the removal of the deposits—the seizure of the People's Treasury, by the Executive. He spoke of the prophecies of the great Whig statesmen of that period, and showed how they had all been fulfilled. The measures of the Executive, aimed at the currency and the established institutions of the country, he pronounced were the cause of all our troubles and distress.

Then he took up the statement which President Van Buren gave in his message of the causes of our embarrassment and distress, and exposed its exaggerations and unpardonable misstatements. He referred to some of the arguments of Mr. King of the South, and contradicted them with additional facts and illustrations. He ascribed the whole mischievousness to the policy of the Government; and proved that the embarrassment in the different countries in Europe were in exact proportion to the connection they had with this country. In England, which has the greatest connection with this country, the commercial distress was the greatest. France suffered in a next degree—being next to England in her connection with us. And it is notorious that those who had tried to do with us, suffered least, and that the heaviest failures were those of houses connected with the American trade. He said the President was right in attributing the mischiefs in England and this country to the same cause—but, he maintained, that cause was the policy of our own Government on all subjects connected with the currency.

The course of the Administration with reference to the Compromise Act (the compromise on the Tariff) added the operation of its financial policy. They keep the people in a state of incertitude as to their intentions, and the consequence was that among all the sufferings, in the late winter, none were so great as that of the Manufacturers. He contended that the cause of the great surplus, and thus the cause of the embarrassment now appearing as a result of the surplus was produced by the government policy on the public lands. He argued that the true cause was, that we have not had for the last eight years the benefit of a free government. Instead of the People controlling the Executive, the Executive has controlled the People. He illustrated this argument at length.

Mr. Clay then noticed in detail the most important measures recommended by the Committee of Finance. He assailed with immense power the Sub-Treasury scheme; and exposed the dangers to the liberties and the safety of the country which would result from the establishment of such a system. He exposed himself in the most open and decisive manner in favor of a National Bank. His remarks on the subject, when published, will make a powerful impression.

He concluded by declaring his intention to support the motion of Mr. King for the postponement of the Bill to December; though he should have preferred to have it postponed indefinitely.

Mr. W. also offered a resolution in the House of Representatives on the 19th ult., "that a select committee be appointed by ballot, to inquire into the causes of the extraordinary delays and failures and the enormous expenditures, which have attended the prosecution of the war against the Indians in Florida; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and that it have power to sit during the recess, and that it make report to the next session of Congress."

This resolution gave rise to quite an animated debate, in which a number of gentlemen took part both for and against it. It has been the means of eliciting some startling facts relative to the waste of the public money in Florida. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Garland of Louisiana, stated that in one case, fifty-one dollars had been expended in the United States upon a single dollar's worth of goods, and that for a single trip of a certain steamer, the Government had expended a great deal of money. Three millions were expended in the year of the rebellion. Mr. Clay proposed to amend the resolution, which Mr. W. withdrew, as he intended not to support the resolution, but the cause of the war.

Mr. Webster has been presented with a walking stick by some of the citizens of Ohio. It is a gift of the Buckeye, and bears on its mounting the following inscription: "Presented to DANIEL WEBSTER by the Buckeye, July 12, 1837." On being called on the subject, Mr. W. said, "you see I am prepared to take the Buckeye." Lang may the Buckeye and Mr. Webster live in this mutual respect to each other!

A detailed illustration of a glass bottle of Gray's Infusible Ink. The bottle is cylindrical with a slightly tapered neck. It features a dark, solid-colored label on the front. The label has the words "GRAY'S" at the top in a stylized font, followed by "INFUSIBLE INK" in a larger, bold, serif font. The bottle is shown with a cork stopper and a small, dark, rectangular object, possibly a quill or a pen nib, resting on the surface in front of it. The background is a light, textured surface.

 I am now 55 years of age—when in my 30th year, I received a wound on my left leg, which became ulcerated, and continued as until the month of March last. It would occasionally heal, and then break out again; but most of the time it was in a very painful condition; the sore extended to a large size, and became very

I tried many remedies to make a cure, but success, until I applied Cray's Incurable, until two pots of which have effectually, my leg, and reduced it to its natural size. My cure would have been made much sooner, had I strictly attended to the directions for the use of the Ointment; but this I failed to do, while much exercise, and very imprudently, was indulged in. My leg has been well for some six months, during which time, I have much, yet it remains firm and free from any more inflammation. After having been
